Good morning Forest e-Update Subscribers,

Hard to believe that the students will be arriving back on campus in just a couple of weeks. Done are the quiet days of good campus parking spaces and next to zero traffic. Here are the first few hints of cooler fall weather and the energy of over 32,000 students returning to campus. Go Hokies!

This summer I installed 2 native wildflower pollinator gardens at the house (see photos on the VFLEP Facebook page), covering about ¼ of an acre total. These successfully reclaimed areas of the yard that were formerly unmanageable (too steep to mow/bush hog) and rather ugly, while helping our pollinators. Ungrateful pollinators I should say, since I also spent the summer getting stung - by wasps (including yellow jackets) and sweat bees. In spite of all the stinging, I think next year is the year I'll start my bee-keeping back up. I certainly have the habitat for them now. In addition, VDACS is offering free hives to beekeepers, while funding lasts. I applied for mine today and it was simple. And keeping with the pollinator theme, stay tuned for the Fall 2018 Virginia Forest Landowner Update newsletter which will feature a story on creating pollinator habitat. In the mail to you on October 1.

This fall I'll be on the road a lot – working with VFLEP's partners to offer woodland owners a wide array of educational programs. Check out what we have scheduled for you:
