Good morning, Forest Update Subscribers,

Well, it's spring. As a cold-weather lover, I can't say that I am looking forward to months of temperatures above 40, but I know many (perhaps most) of you are happy about the change. I've started cleaning up my pollinator gardens, the vegetable gardens (yes plural, we now have 3!) are almost ready to be tilled, and I have lettuce and spinach in the greenhouse. In addition, the plums, pears, and nectarines are all blooming. So, enjoy the warmth while you read the Spring edition of the Virginia Forest Landowner Update newsletter.

In this edition:

Generation NEXT: Legacy Planning for Forest and Farm Owners

Fifteen years ago, Mike Santucci, Virginia Department of Forestry, and Adam Downing, Virginia Cooperative Extension, recognized the need to reach Virginia's woodland owners with a palatable approach to legacy planning. Legacy planning is planning for the future of your woodland after your death. It means working out the legal and financial estate plan to pass on your woodland and also working with your heirs to pass on knowledge and a love of the land. Read more...

You Ain't From Around Here! The Two-horned Trapa: A Wingless Devil that can Fly

Two-horned trapa (Trapa bispinosa) is an invasive aquatic plant that poses a significant threat to waterways in the United States. First identified in Pohick Bay, Virginia, in 2014, it was initially mistaken for the highly invasive Eurasian water chestnut (Trapa natans). While similar in appearance and growth patterns, two-horned trapa produces two-horned seed pods, unlike the four-horned pods of the Eurasian water chestnut. Read more...
